SYNOPSIS

(CONTAINS SPOILERS)

In the nursery of the Darling household, Mr. and Mrs. Darling are bustling about, preparing for an evening on the town. Mr. Darling questions using a dog as a nursemaid, but Mrs. Darling defends Nana by pointing to the previous week, when the furry companion caught the shadow of a boy who had snuck into the nursery. Mr. Darling insists that Nana spend the night downstairs as Mrs. Darling sings a lullaby to her children Wendy, John and Michael.

Now fast asleep, the children don't notice Tinker Bell and Peter Pan's entrance by flight through the window. Tinker Bell leads Peter to his shadow's hiding place. Unable to reattach it, Peter begins to cry, which wakes Wendy. Peter explains, and Wendy offers to sew his shadow to his foot.

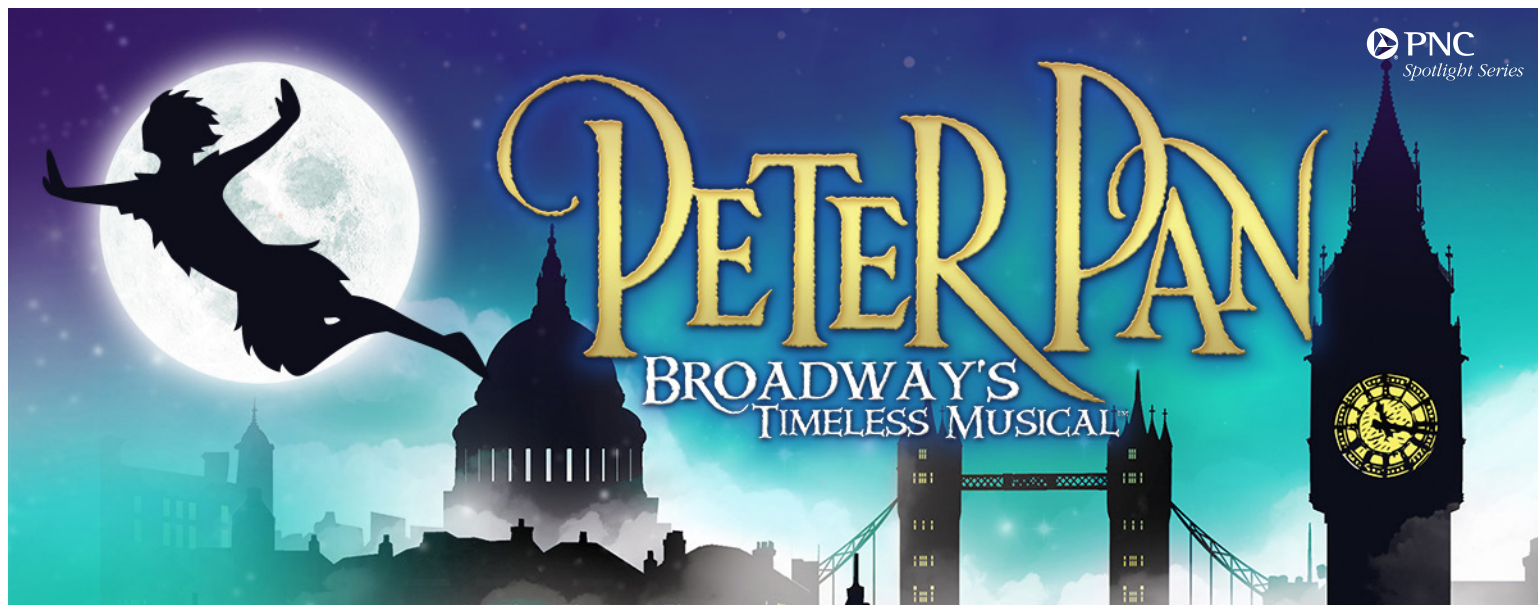

Ever curious and adventuresome, Wendy asks Peter where he comes from. Peter tells her of Neverland, where he is the leader of a band of forgotten children known as The Lost Boys. Wendy says that she will tell Peter and the Lost Boys all of the stories that she knows if he will let her, Michael and John come along, to which Peter agrees. Wendy excitedly awakens her brothers, and Peter teaches them all how to fly. The children follow Peter towards the second star to the right and they're off to Neverland!

As Peter's Lost Boys stand outside their underground lair, they hear Captain Hook and his pirates approaching. Quickly, the boys hide just in time to be missed. Hook exclaims his desperation to kill Peter because he is the one who cut off Hook's hand and threw it to a crocodile, which has developed a taste for Hook and follows him around. Luckily for Hook, the crocodile has swallowed a clock that ticks and will alert Hook to its presence. During his soliloquy, Hook stumbles upon the entrance to the Lost Boys' hideout. Suddenly, the Croc's ticking can be heard, making the pirates flee. Thinking they are safe, the Boys reemerge but are driven back into hiding when a group of Neverlanders appear, led by Tiger Lily. Leaving the Boys alone, the Neverlanders pursue the pirates.

A few days later, the pirates have captured Tiger Lily. Peter hides behind a rock and mimics Captain Hook's voice in an attempt to convince the pirates to let her go. Catching onto this trick, Hook tries to ambush Peter, but they are all chased away by Tiger Lily's tribe.

Back at the hideout, The Lost Boys are roused to fighting positions as Tiger Lily and the Neverlanders rush in. In the nick of time, Peter enters and reveals the truce between them and they vow eternal friendship. Tiger Lily and her Neverlanders leave to stand guard around the house above while Peter sings a lullaby to Wendy and the Boys.

Unbeknownst to those in the hideout, the pirates attack and the boys and Wendy are carried off to the pirate ship. As the plank is prepared, Hook hears the tick-tock of the crocodile and panics, but it is actually Peter with a clock. Hook believes that the ship is now cursed and, thinking Wendy is the source, commands her to walk the plank. Peter ditches his disguise as the Neverlanders and Lost Boys attack. The pirates are entertainingly defeated, and Peter challenges Hook to a duel and defeats him.

Back at home, a worried Mr. and Mrs. Darling have waited by the nursery window every night, hoping for their children to return. The children silently reappear and sing to their mother. Joyous over their return, the Darlings happily agree to adopt the Lost Boys.

Suddenly, we are at the same nursery, only many years later. Much to the surprise of a grown-up Wendy, Peter has returned. She informs him that she cannot come to NeverLand because she has grown up; she is married and has a daughter of her own now, Jane. Peter begins to cry, and Wendy leaves the room at the sound of her husband's voice. Awakened by the boy's crying, Jane introduces herself to Peter and reveals that she knows him through her mother's stories. She has been waiting for him to come take her to Neverland and to learn to fly. Peter, now happy again, throws fairy dust on her. As they are about to leave, Wendy tries to stop them as she expresses a newfound desire to go back with Jane. Peter, however, reminds her that she is now grown-up and cannot find Neverland; she must let Jane go. Peter and her daughter leap out the window and disappear into the night as Wendy looks on.
